PENNSYLVANIA STATE ITEMS

Meadville.—Having pleaded nolo contendere to two charges of embezzlement, one of $19,256.13 of state funds and the other of $1600 of county funds while he was register and recorder of Crawford county, Major Harry F. Miller was sentenced by Judge T. J. Prather to two terms in the Western Penitentiary, each for a period of not less than a year and four months nor more than three years. Because of his excellent record in the world war the court announced that the sentences would run concurrently.

Weatherly.—A large buck deer is paying regular visits to Burana Park on the outskirts of town and apparently senses that it is immune from attack. The animal frequently comes very close to homes and shows none of the shyness that is pronounced during the hunting season.

Wilkes-Barre.—Numerous black-hand letters that have come in the mail of business men or have been found under their doors are causing the police considerable alarm and the business men some uneasiness. The letters were first regarded as a joke, but now they are looked upon in a more serious manner. Their circulation started a few days ago. Letters reached the firm of Breeze & Yeager and the Miller Transfer company, and in each $500 was demanded under threat of death by dynamiting. The letters all refer to recent dynamitings in the Pittston area and threaten like vengeance if money is not paid. The letters are well written, and all that the police have seen appear to be written by the same person.

Huntingdon.—Taxpayers from all over the country held an indignation meeting in the court house and by resolution demanded that the county commissioners should either put the real estate assessment back to the 1919 basis or resign their offices. The commissioners have insisted that the triennial assessors should assess real estate all over Huntingdon county at its real value, as required by law, instead of the percentage value, as heretofore. Where assessors refused to do this, the commissioners, acting as a board of revision, fixed values according to their best information.

Mount Carmel.—After being imprisoned two and a half hours, Joseph Bolich, of Knipmunt, employed at the Scott colliery, was rescued alive, with a broken leg and many bruises. He was at the face of a breast when coal rushed. He managed to stay on top of the debris, but became pinned between the rush and the top.

Harrisburg.—Twenty-one veterans of the world war, most of them having served overseas, have enlisted in the state police.

Pittsburgh.—Operation of railroad trains through written orders and not by telephone was recommended by a coroner's jury which investigated a recent wreck on the Union railroad which cost the lives of three trainmen. The jury found the wreck was caused by a misunderstanding in orders transmitted by telephone.

Uniontown.—When state police and other officers investigating chicken thefts thought they saw the imprints of a feminine shoe, they no doubt were correct, as Ada Brown came into court and pleaded guilty to stealing chickens. She admitted she took three birds from the coop of Thomas S. Bartlett, of Penn street. Before sentence was passed she was given an opportunity to explain, but remained silent. The court then sentenced her to pay the costs in the case and to spend the next thirty days in the Fayette county jail.

Allentown.—Burned by flaming oil that drenched her clothing when a can exploded as she tried to hasten the kitchen fire with kerosene, Mrs. Katie Mastlanya, aged 32, of Ormrod, died at the Allentown Hospital. Her clothes were burned from her body, and her 1-year-old son, Mike, and John Leder, a boarder, were badly burned in trying to save her. The house was wrecked.

Lewistown.—Joseph B. Hostetter, 73 years old, and his bride, Lizzie Y. Hostetter, 70 years old, announced their wedding after having kept the secret one month, as arranged by the couple prior to having the nuptial knot tied by Rev. John K. Byler, an Amish preacher, who lives near Bellefonte.

Altoona.—In his annual report, Prof. T. S. Davis, superintendent of schools in Blair county, discloses that he traveled 10,000 miles by automobile, 1000 miles by train and several hundred miles on foot in discharging his duties last year. He made 600 visits to the various schools under his supervision, attended 400 meetings of an educational character, in most of which he took some part, received 1000 office calls, answered 2000 telephone calls, wrote 2000 letters and sent out 20,000 circulars.

Uniontown.—During a health lecture in the high school auditorium, seven or eight high school girls fainted.

Shanandoah.—Anthony Gionis, 51, of this place, after a week's illness, died, cut his throat with a razor, dying shortly afterward.

Harrisburg.—No awards of contracts or construction of state highways were made before the return of the report from the West.

Mt. Carmel.—Held up by a gang, Marshall Heiner was killed.

Drums.—Farriers in this section have registered objections to the proposed location of the new Luzerne County Tuberculosis Hospital in Butler township. They claim it will be a detriment instead of a benefit.

Harrisburg.—Agents of the department of agriculture have been checking up on fertilizers being sold in the state this winter. Hundreds of samples of mixtures on the market have been gone over by chemists. As a rule, it was stated, the fertilizers are running true to label. Especial attention is now being given to the operation of the new seed law owing to the approach of the planting season.

Bellefonte.—Michael Morano, of Philadelphia, who in April, 1920, killed his wife, Theresa Maria Morano, by stabbing her seventeen times, was electrocuted in the Rockview Penitentiary. Morano was taken to the chair at 7.00, and in seven minutes was pronounced dead by Robert J. Campbell. The body will be buried in the penitentiary cemetery.

Clinton.—On a petition of members of council, the Clinton county court appointed Mrs. R. Jane Kessinger as overseer of the poor at Mill Hall to fill the vacancy caused by the death of her husband.

Freeland.—The Freeland Ice company took advantage of the zero spell to harvest a second crop of ice 12 to 14 inches thick.

Allensville.—Esther, 13-year-old daughter of Isaac Peachey, a farmer here, lost an arm in a fodder shredder.

Pittsburgh.—Protesting against the proposed performance of "Salome" by the Chicago Grand Opera company here next month, the Pittsburgh Council of Churches, through its secretary, Rev. Dr. Charles R. Zahner, sent a letter to the grand opera committee asking that another opera be substituted.

Lewistown.—Council refused all bids for the position of borough secretary. The borough fathers had in mind the installation of a secretary who would adopt a new system of bookkeeping and remain on the job eight hours a day. The bids ranged from $72 to $200 a month.

Pittsburgh.—Thieves forced an entrance to the garage of the Service company, an automobile concern, by the simple expedient of running a heavy truck through the back door. Then they blew open the safe in the office and stole $650 in money, $650 in checks, some Liberty bonds and a quantity of other negotiable securities. They then loaded their truck with storage batteries and drove away.

Hazleton.—State policemen arrested Daniel Garmone and Stanley Berkosky, of Hazleton, and George Schupeck, of West Hazleton, charging them with buying stolen automobile tires from Stanley Maritz and Stanley Kominsky, now serving terms in the Eastern Penitentiary. The three were held for court by Alderman Fallon.

Sunbury.—B. Frank Zettlemoyer, game warden for Northumberland and Montour counties, liberated twenty-four wild turkeys in the woods in different portions of his district. They came from the wilds of Snyder county.

Sunbury.—This city has entered the 150th year of its existence. Plans were laid for a sesqui-centennial celebration to be held here, commencing Saturday July 1, and ending on Independence Day night.

Greenville.—Mrs. Clarinda Johnson and her granddaughter, Irene Hulbert, 5 years old, were burned to death when the farm house of Fred Hulbert, near Westford, was destroyed, according to information which reached here. Hulbert, who was in the barn nearby when the fire was discovered, ran into the house a fire was seriously burned while trying to save his daughter.

Harrisburg.—A check for payment of the 1921 appropriation for the school district of Cass township, Huntingdon county, was sent from the state capitol, according to Dr. Thomas E. Pinegan, state superintendent of public instruction, who said that the report of the district reached his department. At the state treasury it was stated school districts were being paid at the rate of about 200 a day. The directors recently threatened to close the Cass township schools.

Cornellville.—Following the declaration of war upon worthless curs in Cornellville, Samuel Watson, official dog killer, dispatched 77 in one day. This number indicates about one-fifth of the number of unlicensed dogs within the city limits and the slaughter will continue. Watson said he intended to kill every dog in the city that did not have a license attached to the collar, but he has relented to such an extent that he is considering the prosecution of the owners, rather than the wholesale slaughter of the canines. It is said that at least a half hundred prosecutions will be brought within a few days.

Contesville.—John Swartzentruber's mule kicked over a lantern in her owner's barn here and caused a blaze which destroyed the barn, wagon shed and other outbuildings. Fire companies from Elverson, Churchtown and Goodville responded, but were unable to check the blaze. The mule was rescued.

Allensville.—Carl Diffenderfer and Aurie Musser were injured by the explosion of a gasoline tank at an Allensville garage.

Larabee.—Henry McGinnis, caught in a fall of slate in the mines of the Larabee Coal company, died two hours later in the Larabee hospital.

Sonsontown.—Charged with beating a wife with a heavy club until she was near death, Peter Pnash, of near by, was arrested and committed to the Fayette county jail.

Yocastown.—J. McD. Aiken was appointed postmaster here to succeed Ira Keller.

RULES FOR CONTESTANTS

Any person who reads this ad may take part in the contest.

Each letter must be written in the square beside the firm's name where the letter appeared.

Sentence must not contain over 200 LETTERS, but may contain any number of letters less than 200.

It is NOT absolutely necessary that the letters displayed by the members of the Booster Association be used in your sentence, but they must appear in the square opposite the firm's name.

Contest closes Monday, March 27, and all sentences, with list of firms and letters properly placed, must be sent to Room 49, Altoona Trust Building, and marked "Gold Letter Contest."

Sign your name to this list after you have marked all the letters in the proper squares and write your sentence on a sheet of blank paper and mail the two together to room 49, Altoona Trust building.

Impartial judges will be appointed at close of contest and these judges will NOT be permitted to know the names of any who send in sentences until after winners are decided upon--so you are assured your sentence will receive all due consideration.

LESSON FOR MARCH 12

AMOS WARNS ISRAEL (TEMPERANCE LESSON)

LESSON TEXT--Amos 6:1-8.
GOLDEN TEXT--Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.--Prov. 20:1.
REFERENCE MATERIAL--Isa. 5:11; 12, 22, 23, 24-25; Hosea 4:11, Gal. 5:19-21.
PRIMARY TOPIC--God Sends Amos on an Errand.

JUNIOR TOPIC--A Prophet Who Was a Friend to the Poor.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC--The Consequences of Self-Indulgence.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC--Social Evils Yet to Be Conquered.

The kingdom of Israel reached a high state of prosperity in the time of Jeroboam II, and with it came a condition of luxury, corruption and wickedness.

The judgment woe of this lesson is directed against the sins of the upper classes in Samaria. The same sins are practiced in America, in the nation and in the church. With the increase of wealth in America has come luxury, corruption and gross wickedness which staggers the imagination. It behooves all to give a listening ear, for God will eventually enter into judgment. Our lesson is a temperance lesson. Temperance applies to other things than indulgence in intoxicating liquor. Our age is intoxicated with pleasure, pursuit of gain and selfish ambition.

I. Reckless Security (vv. 1-3). They were blind to the perils that surrounded them. They were living in a fool's paradise, closing their eyes to the approaching storm of judgment as predicted by Amos. They trusted in the mountains of Samaria for their protection. They regarded their city as impregnable. They no doubt regarded the utterance of Amos as impracticable--the dreams of a fanatic.

The tragic thing about this blindness on the part of the chief ones of the nation was they were so puffed up with pride that they failed to read the signs of the times in the light of history. (v. 2.) The cities of Calneh and Hamath, though great and mighty, had fallen. To disregard the lessons of history, to dismiss the thought of impending judgment, is to bring near the "sent of violence" (v. 3). Let chaotic Europe and Russia be the red lights of warning to America, and let all injustice and class selfishness be laid aside.

II. Luxury (vv. 4-6). The luxury of these upper classes in Samaria expressed itself in: 1. Extravagant furniture (v. 4). They had beds of ivory--perhaps wood inlaid with ivory. Costly as their furniture was in that day, it was commonplace as compared to some of the expensive furniture and fittings in our great cities.

2. Laziness (v. 4). They stretched themselves upon their couches--lived lives of indolence. Such is the way of many still.

3. Feasted on delicacies (v. 4). The implication here is that they had their dainties out of season. This is what many of the rich pride themselves in.

4. Adorn their feasts with music (v. 5). They sang idle songs--even invented musical instruments for this purpose. They prostituted the noble art of music to their sensual feasts.

5. They drank wine (v. 6). They were not content with ordinary drinking vessels. They drank from bowls, indicating excessive drinking. They were so mastered by the intoxicating cup that their feasts which were adorned with the refinements of music ended in drunkenness.

III. Failure to Grieve for Joseph (v. 6). Joseph here stands for Ephraim and Manasseh, his two sons. Ephraim became the principal tribe of the northern kingdom, so Joseph is used as a synonym for the nation. The upper classes were indulging in these effeminate luxuries, entirely indifferent to the groanings of the masses. And whenever such a condition exist in a nation there is need of Amos' thunder God's judgment upon those who are guilty of it.

IV. The Inevitable Issue (vv. 7, 8). 1. They shall go into captivity (v. 7). The northern nation was first in sin, therefore first to go into captivity. What a striking contrast this picture! Instead of lying on ivory couches feasting upon dainties, they are with the suffering exiles.

2. The certainty of the issue (v. 8). It is inevitable because of God's nature. He is a God of justice. He has sworn that judgment shall fall. He is the God of hosts--the controller of the whole universe, therefore none can escape. God hates the wickedness of the world, and He will bring into judgment the men and women who revel in luxury with no concern for the poor and needy. Though God waits long, He does not forget. The escape for America is repentance.

Abide in Him. And now, little children, abide in Him; that when He shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed at His coming.--I John 2:28.

Great Mischief. Great mischiefs happen more often from folly, meanness, and vanity, than from the greater sins of avarice and ambition--Burke

Gude's Pepto-Mangan Restores Strength and Prevents Illness

Aged people often need a good blood tonic. When the blood becomes clogged with poisons from the system, Gude's Pepto-Mangan purifies it by driving off the waste matter. Good blood is full of vitality and prevents illness, giving the body greater power of resistance. The weaknesses of old age are greatly helped by a supply of rich, red blood. Gude's Pepto Mangan is sold in liquid or tablet form by all druggists. It has been recommended by physicians for 30 years and is a valuable tonic and builder for the weak and run down of all ages from childhood to old age.—Advertisement.

McSPARRAN OR A THIRD PARTY

The section of John A. McSparran for the Democratic nominee for Governor does not mean to the people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania that it will be a victory for Democracy if McSparran should be elected. It means first that the party has shaken off the chains of the bosses and has emerged into the limelight with a man, a man, not boss-ridden, not hampered by promises, not tied down to the interests of the state, but a free man, aloof from all these entangling and hampering influences, to do his whole duty to the farmers, laborers, interests, and all alike and to safeguard the tax payers of this state from an heretofore excessive and intolerable burden. And we sincerely believe that John A. McSparran can be trusted to do the right thing. Democratic newspapers are pressing the claim too strong as a Democratic victory. We feel that the issue is more truly the people's victory to have on one of the major party's tickets a man like McSparran. We get this feeling from such men as the big Republican from the Susquehanna Valley who replied to Beidleman's letter of inquiry when he said to Beidleman, that the thing we need in Pennsylvania is a Democrat in the Governor's chair to clean out that bunch and get rid of them entirely. While this Republican mentioned a Democrat was needed, yet he meant that someone other than that bunch at Harrisburg was needed and of course the Democratic Party was the next strongest medium through which to work to accomplish that end. Any victory which may come through McSparran must come and has come so far from an uprising, disgusted and burdened Democracy.

But, second, the Democrats are not the only ones burdened and a victory for them will not be for them alone. There are thousands of Republicans who are up against the wall and are clamoring for relief. The taxes are excessive for the farmers as well. And they are composed of Democrats and Republicans alike. The laborers are burdened to death with taxes and lack of labor and they are clamoring, both Democrats and Republicans, for relief. Independents of all parties, Democratic and Republican, are so burdened and disgusted that they are looking for relief somewhere, and John A. McSparran is the only light.

So an election of John A. McSparan means a victory, not so much for the Democratic party as a victory for the people and if the election comes across the spoils should not all go to the Democratic party but to those who help as well. Let's get down to the rock-bottom facts and clean house. That's the prime importance and see if something can't be done to relieve the burdens of the people.

It is no use to conceal the fact that a class of Democrats don't want McSparran. The Conference on February 24 had them there. They never applauded, they always frowned and always made it a point to disparage any mention of his name. So the farmer element and the labor element and the independent element of the party made it possible for McSparran and the same element consisting of Democrats, Republicans, Prohibitionists and all in the general election will elect him or he won't be elected.

So the victory, if a victory at all, in November will be by all, farmers and laborers, Democrats and Republicans, alike and while it will come through the Democratic ticket as a medium, the snails should go to those who helped as well, outspoken

The nomination of McSparran makes an independent movement unnecessary. McSparran is the hope of independent thought.

EBERSOLE SENTENCED TO CHAIR

Jonas Ebersole, convicted of murder in the first degree at the January term of court, was sentenced to death by electrocution by Judge Thomas F. Bailey on Tuesday. Ebersole was convicted of the killing of Kenneth Casper Brandt, the twelve year old son of Harry Brandt, of Woodbury township, last November. At argument court last week the counsel for Ebersole presented reasons for a new trial and made an offer to enter a plea of guilty of murder in the second degree. This offer, as well as the reasons for a new trial, was refused by the court. It has not been intimated whether or not an appeal will be taken to the supreme court.

OUT-OF-DATE MACHINE

A committee made up of three members of the senate and three members of the house is now considering the whole problem of the organization of the executive departments of the government with a view to finding out how to reorganize them so as to increase their efficiency and decrease their cost of operation. It is about time. The great executive departments of the government have not been reorganized or greatly modernized since Alexander Hamilton's day.

Representative Reavis of Nebraska is one of the members of this joint congressional committee that is making the present investigation. He put the resolution through the house that brought about the appointment of the committee. He is a part of the national government machine and he ought to know what he is talking about when he says that "while the government of the United States is the world's biggest business, it is likewise the world's worst managed business."

That is an indictment and a statement of fact that will stand the closest scrutiny and the most unflinching analysis. But listen to Mr. Reavis:

"Why should the Interior department run an insane asylum and a college for negroes and a school for the deaf? How did it get that way? Why should one personnel in the pension bureau in the Interior department be caring for the disabled soldiers of the Civil war and the Spanish American war, while another personnel in the bureau of war risk insurance of the treasury is caring for the veterans of the World war? Why this hodgepodge of totally unrelated purposes which is resulting in endless duplication and appalling expense?"

I will let Mr. Reavis go on without further interruption. As a member of the house he has his share of the responsibility for the conditions he describes:

There are 39 separate governmental agencies handling engineering, architectural and public works functions, all of related kind. There is no good reason why all these agencies should not be coordinated in one department and about 38 of the useless organizations done away with. There are 26 government agencies engaged in surveying and mapping; there are 27 separate and distinct agencies engaged in public building operations; there are 16 agencies authorized to build roads, there are 19 engaged in hydraulic construction; there are 16 doing work on rivers; there are 10 engaged in public land functions, there are 15 doing chemical investigation connected with public work operations, there are 22 doing engineering and research.

Many of these agencies have been inactive for a number of years, but they are keeping up their personnel in anticipation of work in the future. We could save $200,000 a year, in my judgment, by doing away with useless bureaus and duplication of activities.

Some of the duplications are ridiculous and absurd. For instance, the government seeks to protect the wild animals in the national parks. If a brown kadlak bear has two cubs, one brown and one black, as often happens, and one should shoot the brown cub he must make his settlement with one department, but if he shoots its full brother, the black cub, he must settle with another department. If you were to shoot a fox in a park your settlement would be with the Department of Agriculture, while if you trapped the same fox you must make your settlement with the Department of Commerce.

The government issued last year through its several bureaus and departments 16 cookbooks. The last one that was issued was published by the board of national education. This is a board organized by the congress for the purpose of rehabilitating crippled soldiers of the World war, to prevent, as far as possible, their becoming derelicts in life. It may be of interest to state that while the government has been issuing 16 cookbooks it has been consuming vast quantities of print paper in these and similar useless publications. 1,300 country town newspapers have suspended in the last three months because they could not secure print paper.

Mr. Reavis and a great many others have sensed the feeling in the country and in congress that the time has come to put an end to all this sort of thing. He gives reasons for his belief:

One of the reasons is that the people demand that their taxation be reduced. For many years we have been collecting the revenues of this government through systems of indirect taxation. The revenues have been collected through a protective tariff and by excise taxation or intoxicating liquors. Indirect taxation of this kind prevents the people from realizing fully just who is paying the expenses of the government. There was a time when the expenses of the government amounted to only 12 cents per capita per year. Today the annual per capita expense exceeds $40. This tremendous expense has made it necessary to resort to direct taxation, and the people have suddenly become painfully aware of who pays the expenses of the government. There is no reason why the elimination of duplications and overlapping in the departments will result in the saving of millions of dollars. There is no reason why it should not be done.

There is every reason, in the presence of the strike and turmoil that prevail in this country and of the unrelenting pressure of the high cost of the necessities of life, that the government should be put upon a sane, efficient and economical basis.

Whoever by public clamor or other means can induce congress and the executive departments to organize the routine business of the national government will have performed a great public service. Note that I say "organize" and not "reorganize," for in no proper sense has the federal business ever been organized.

sure. Perhaps not today or tomorrow, for he's just renewing his acquaintance with you. By the way he looked last night I could tell he was considering it."

A handkerchief dropped from Evelyn's fingers, and she stooped to pick it up.

"If I lead Marcus on," she suggested, rising, "and—get him to ask me to marry him, will you give me any sum of money I want?"

Her voice shook with emotion, and her young face seemed suddenly old and haggard. Mrs. Robertson had never seen her daughter in such a state.

"Sit down a minute, Evelyn," she commanded. "Now tell me what you want money for. I know very well that you haven't spent what I've allowed you upon yourself. That's why I've refused you so much lately. No more secrets or mystery! I want the facts. Now tell me this minute."

The girl dropped into a chair and buried her face in her hands.

"I can't," she whispered.

For some time she remained in the same attitude, while her mother studied her silently. At length the girl lifted herself erect.

"I can't explain," she broke out, "and I suppose you're thinking all kinds of things. I can't help it if you do. You'll have to give me the money I need, if you want me to marry Marc. There's no 'ifs' and 'ands' about that. If you'll give me the money," she faltered, wiped her lips and concluded slowly, "I'll marry Marcus MacKenzie."

"You must be crazy, Eve," Mrs. Robertson said in a cold voice, "to talk to me like that. If you have any secrets from me, it's time you told them."

"Well?" shot from Evelyn sharply, "suppose I have? It's my secret, isn't it? Are you going to help me or not, that's the question."

It was evident to Mrs. Robertson that the situation was not to be trifled with. In a twinkling her daughter had changed from a meek and timid girl to an aggressive woman. To try to bully her any more would be a mere waste of effort.

"Heavens," she began, "this is a pretty how to do, I must say. I can't imagine why you should want money. It doesn't make much difference, anyway. There are more reasons than one why you can't get it from me."

"What are they?" fell from the girl's lips.

"The first is," returned the mother, tartly, "I don't like being held up in this high-handed manner by my own daughter."

She paused; and Evelyn caught her breath. If that were all, she would row and rage until she got what she wanted.

Mother and daughter were staring at one another, each demanding an explanation. Evelyn did not intend to make any! Mrs. Robertson weakened before the steely-blue in the girl's eyes.

"But the main reason is," she went on, "I haven't got it. I don't own this house, nor—"

Evelyn sprang to her feet and confronted her mother. Her face was drawn into cruel lines, and her hands were gripped spasmodically.

"You lie," she burst forth. "You've always lied to me about money."

A bitter smile drew down the corners of the older woman's mouth. She knew how true the accusation was.

"Well, this time," she answered, "I'm telling you the simple truth. I not only do not own this house, but—"

"Then who does own it?" interjected the girl.

"Your cousin, Robert Percival," was the quick response; "and he's supplied all the money we have used. Now perhaps you won't try to get something out of me I haven't got."

"Mother!" cried the girl, in agony. "I told you, Eve, that you should know the truth," Mrs. Robertson continued. "You've asked for it, and here it is. When Robert's father and mother died, I came here to take care of him. I had nothing then and have nothing now. You were only a baby, and I've always kept the facts from you. When Robert went to war, he arranged that if he didn't come back, I should have the home and enough money to keep us."

Evelyn's eyes widened. Of a surety, this was the truth.

"Then we aren't rich?" she demanded.

"No, that we're not," responded the lady, "and what's more, we are dependent upon Robert for everything."

With a quick gesture Evelyn caught her mother's arm, despair changing the lines on her face.

"Oh, you needn't be so theatrical, my dear," said the woman. "Robert's never given me the slightest reason to feel he thought us a burden. I'm quite like his mother, as I should be. The

In the Silent City ought not to say anything against the squatters. If the grand lady only knew it, her own daughter had stooped to a trick such as would put to shame any hut-woman. A squatter wife would not leave her man to do for himself or deny him before the world. Added to Polly's personal humiliation was MacKenzie's threat against Daddy Hopkins.

The hope Robert Percival's words had instilled in her seemed to die as she traveled, and her heart beat with fear, for should Old Marc get his fingers on Daddy Hopkins, Polly had no doubt there would be nothing but imprisonment for him and the graveyard for her and Jerry. She could not think of life without her father. Not a single night had she ever been away from his kindly love and attention—and Wee Jerry! A vivid picture rose before her of the baby's grief if he could not straddle daddy's neck and play his father was a horse.

When she reached the top of the ragged rocks, she pulled up and cast a glance over the lake. The calling of her name made her turn swiftly. Recognizing Evelyn Robertson's voice, she waited while the other girl came down the path from MacKenzie's woods. She was quite unlike the little squatter. A fashionable raincoat protected her from the wet; and she carried a light umbrella in her gloved hand. The greeting between them was one of embarrassment.

"I were going to find my daddy," Polly explained. "He's somewhere along the lake. I didn't know I'd come on you this mornin'."

The memory of Mrs. Robertson's words brought a rush of color to her face, and she looked down at her feet. There surged up in her a feeling that she did not want anything to do with any of these people. Why should she? They were rich; and she was only a squatter brat! She started to walk away.

"I said," she flung over her shoulder, "I were lookin' for my daddy. Good-by."

Evelyn Robertson was not interested in Jeremiah Hopkins. As far as she was concerned, the whole Silent City might be washed off into the waves and carried away. Her own troubles filled her mind. The shock of her mother's disclosure stunned her, for without the help she had expected, she could see no way out of Oscar Bennett's clutches. In the meantime, the squatter girl was her only means of communication.

"Wait, Pollyop, wait a minute! I came down just to speak to you."

Wheeling slowly around, Polly faced her.

"What do you want?" she asked in surly tones.

"Pollyop," ejaculated Evelyn, coming swiftly to her side, "I'm almost scared to death. My cousin, Bob—oh, you've got to help me again!"

Bob! Then the soldier in the uniform was Evelyn's cousin. Bob! That was the nicest name in all the world, a name fitted for the man who had dropped into the Silent City to help along the squatters. Suddenly her mood changed. She forgot Oscar Bennett and his odious words, forgot that the girl crying for her aid had allowed her mother to say dreadful things against her and Daddy Hopkins. If Evelyn were related to the soldier, then Polly Hopkins would do anything Miss Robertson asked of her.

"What do you want?" she repeated shyly, blushing.

"It's this," answered Evelyn. "Mr. MacKenzie's home—and my cousin came with him. My cousin, Robert Percival!"

"Is your cousin a handsome feller with long legs an' a face?"

Pollyop stopped for lack of words.

only thing necessary is that you should feather your own nest before Bob makes up his mind to get married. I know very well you've turned down many a young man in Ithaca. Now your chance has come. Marc MacKenzie's rich. He loves you."

Without waiting to hear anything more, Evelyn ran out of the room. Mrs. Robertson sank back with a sigh, partly of relief that at last Evelyn knew just the situation they were in, partly of anxiety as to her daughter's secret.

CHAPTER III.

As she ran, Polly Hopkins cogitated on MacKenzie's words. Evelyn's mother had said that she was as odd as she was filthy.

Mrs. Robertson! The arrogant woman who lived on the hill in a house almost big enough to hold every person

Gnawty Doggie!

Little Boy (to nervous lady afraid of his dog)—Don't be scared, lady. He never bites; he only nibbles.—Boston Transcript.

How could she describe the fine, sympathetic countenance she had seen from the hut roof?

"Yes," Evelyn interjected. "Bob's awfully good-looking, and he's tall too. Now listen, Pollyop; you must go to Oscar again for me this very day—Oh, dear, he's so mean to me!"

Polly considered the pretty face a moment. She could not understand why the home-coming of the cousin and Old Marc should make Evelyn so flustered. With her steady eyes upon her she was studying over this question when Evelyn burst forth:

"Tell Oscar I haven't any money! I just can't get it now! And, Pollyop, tell him too that he mustn't write me any more letters. My mother—well, if she found one of them, she'd turn me out of the house."

Polly's mouth flew open. She could not conceive of a girl doing anything in the world bad enough to make her mother turn her out of her home.

"Lordy! Would she, now?" she gasped.

"My mother's proud," said Evelyn, in excuse. "You know that, Polly."

Certainly Polly knew it! Hadn't she ducked out of sight of the unsympathetic lady many a time when lurking near the Robertson home, with a message from Oscar to Evelyn?

"I don't know what I will do, Polly," the other girl went on, "if you don't help me—and—some time I'll really do something for you."

A temptation to blurt out the words Marcus MacKenzie had spoken assailed the squatter girl; but Evelyn looked worried! Polly's heart was as soft as the velvet in her eyes when she came upon trouble of any kind.

"You've been good to Wee Jerry," she interposed gently. "Awful good. He most giggles his little life away when I bring him the goodies you send him."

"I'm going to do a lot for both of you," returned Evelyn impulsively, "and today I brought this bag of candy for the baby. Here! Take it! And you'll go to Oscar for me as soon as you can, won't you?"

Smiling, Polly slipped the package of sweets into her pocket. She could forgive anything against herself for the sake of seeing Wee Jerry smile and hearing him crow over the contents of the small bag.

"Yep," she agreed, "an' say all you tell me to. But what if he kicks up a row? He's gettin' awful pernicky, Oscar is!"

A sharp cry from Evelyn was followed by:

"Tell him he mustn't! Make him promise he won't! And—and, Pollyop, I'll tell you something else, if you'll promise never to tell."

"I never told anything yet, have I?" Pollyop protested in low, indignant tones.

"No one must ever know about Oscar and me," Evelyn began, still harping upon the great fear that obsessed her, "because—"

"Because of your ma," interrupted Polly. "Sure I know that!"

A slim hand was raised in partial protest.

"Mother's an awful worry to me sometimes, but it's not she altogether. But—but—"

"Then—then—it's your fine-lookin' cousin," came brokenly from Polly, during the pause in Miss Robertson's statement.

"Of course, I wouldn't have him know for anything," Evelyn nodded assent. "Oh, goodness, I might as well tell it and get it over. I love some one else, and he loves me, Pollyop. I want to be his wife more than I've ever wanted anything before. He's wealthy, dear, and I've got to marry him."

Polly's face gathered a shocked expression. How could she marry any one when she was already wedded to Oscar Bennett? By any law Polly knew of, a girl could not have two husbands at the same time. Even the squatters, in their careless way of living, did nothing like that.

"You can't tie up to no other man while you belong to Oscar, Miss Eve," she ventured gravely.

"Well, I know it; of course I know it," retorted Evelyn, resenting the censure in the other's tones; "but I've got to be free. I'm so frantic, I don't much care how. That's the way Oscar's got to help me! Anyway make him understand he's got to wait; he must be quiet and not bother me. Then come tonight, and let me know what he says. Will you, Polly?"

The squatter girl nodded. She would rather have been switched than see Oscar Bennett again.

"Yep," she assented. "I'll hunt him up late this afternoon and then hustle right over to you. I got to go now!"

For some moments after Evelyn left her, Polly watched the slim figure on the path to the woods. Then she suddenly remembered Marcus MacKenzie and without a backward glance hurried swiftly toward the south.

Meantime three squatters from the Silent City were in the Bad Man's ravine, dressing the fish they had netted the night before. One enormous man was seated on a flat rock, his bare feet almost touching the water as it hurried by to the lake. On his shoulders, with his legs wound tightly around the man's neck, sat a small boy, little more than a baby. He was shivering with cold, and as the spring rain shot its drops upon his face, he lifted a small hand and brushed them away. Seemingly oblivious of the weight against his swarthy head, the man picked up a fish and contemplated it with a scowl. Then he proceeded to clean it deftly.

The silence was unbroken for a long time except by the rushing of the water, the gruesome turning of the knives over the fish scales, and a little whimper, now and then, from the child astride the man's neck.

"I heard in town," broke forth Lye Braeger, "that Old Marc MacKenzie's comin' home. Here's where us squatters get h—l flung at us good and plenty."

Jeremiah Hopkins stopped his work and frowned at the speaker.

"He'd best be a-lookin' out for hisself," he muttered. "Mebbe he'll get a taste of the hot place if he does any struttin' around the Silent City."

"Mebbe," repeated Larry Bishop, and no more. Marcus MacKenzie, handsome, smug and rich, had been the instrument that had moved the hands of the law to swing open the prison doors and shove Larry Bishop inside just when his young wife needed him most.

Once in sight of the roaring water, rushing in torrents from the Bad Man's ravine, Polly sent out a peculiar little trill; and the hoarse answer of a man's voice mingled with its echo as it struck the enormous, up-roaring rock slabs.

Polly's heart bounded and lost its heavy weight of fear. Daddy Hopkins had responded ponderously to her first call. In another moment she was crawling up the jagged sides of the deep gulf. As she came up to them, Hopkins' companions waved her a greeting, but stopped their work at the sight of her sober face.

"What's up, lassie?" demanded Hopkins. "You ain't seen a ghost, have you?"

"Worse'n that, Daddy," she replied. "Much worse'n that! Old Marc's home, an' I heard him say he's goin' to root us squatters out of the Silent City."

A brute-like glare flashed into Larry Bishop's eyes.

"Did he, now, brat?" he muttered, taking up his knife and looking at it.

Polly squatted down beside her father, slipping one hand under his arm. The other she gave to the child, who grasped it eagerly.

"Did he, now?" came in repetition from Bishop's throat.

"Yep," asserted Pollyop, with an emphatic bob of her head, "an' I come to tell you all you'd best be a-lookin' out for 'im. Daddy, he says you're the worst man in the settlement, but everybody knows he's a liar."

"He'd best be lookin' out for his own hide," Hopkins shot back like a flash of steel. "I ain't in any mind to stand much of his guff, the dirty duffer."

Withdrawing her arm from her father's, she leaned her chin on her hand. She wanted to urge them not to worry too much, to tell them of the other man, rich like old Marc, who had expressed in tender tones a kindly interest in their welfare. Somehow, though, the words would not come. The peaceful figure did not fit in with the secret understanding that expressed itself in the frowning, furtive glances that passed from one to the other of her men-folks.

ATLAS PORTLAND CEMENT

A NEW industry comes to town, or an old one moves into new and better quarters. Either is a credit to the community and to the merchant who thus gives evidence of his progress.

One man has played a possibly unnoticed, but no less essential part in this community improvement—your building material dealer. His investment in a slow moving, solid, building materials, is a definite pledge of his belief in the community. His stock and ability to deliver promptly enable you to take advantage of weather conditions, and rush unexpectedly needed construction. Your building material dealer's judgment deserves his weight. He is the man who has called Atlas Portland Cement "the Standard by which all other makes are measured."

One night while I was washing dishes my boy friend called on me. He came into the kitchen where I was working, and in my excitement I set a pan of hot water on a chair. New Use for Old Clock.

Little brass or fancy clocks, which were very popular a while back, but which have lost their "going" powers and stay stopped, the face indicating a time that is wholly wrong all the time, can be saved for a new purpose by taking out the glass crystal with ease, inserting a picture and pressing it back in. Thus the little clock will be transformed into a picture frame and its prettiness will still adorn the mantel shelf.

Remember the old heavily loaded pole lines which literally darkened the streets back in the 'nineties?

A triumph of the telephone art were those "big sticks" with their many cross arms and open wires.

But cable is the thing today for these heavy lines. As many as 3000 wires are now enclosed within a sheath no bigger 'round than a man's wrist.

In the more congested districts where it is economical to do so the cables are buried underground.

Progress is to be expected—and progress always toward better and more reliable service—and always toward a more economical service, even though it be extended to the Gulf, the Middle West, the Coast, or wherever American business is transacted.

In cable, switchboard, instrument, and operation this progress is steadily going on. Every day brings a new improvement, a new economy from some point in the Bell System—north, east, south or west.

And it is always available right here in our own city.

That's what makes Bell Service the standard of the world.

WILLIAMSBURG IS HISTORIC PLACE

QUAINT OLD TOWN IN VIRGINIA WHERE PAST AND PRESENT ARE SUBTLY BLENDED.

WREN DESIGNED COURTHOUSE

Interesting Memorial Tablets in Bruton Church—Wythe House, the "Powder Horn" and the College of William and Mary.

By EDWARD B. CLARK

Washington.—A majority of the presidents of the United States have received degrees from the old college of William and Mary, a Virginia institution founded in the early days at Williamsburg. Williamsburg is not far from Washington, so far as time and distance are concerned. Members of congress and other government officials occasionally go there, lured by the historic associations of the old place, by the sights to be seen and by the general restfulness of its surroundings.

It is only three miles across country from Jamestown island, where the first settlement in Virginia was made, to Williamsburg. Jamestown is largely memory, while Williamsburg is both memory and reality. The past and the present are met in its streets, and there is subtle blending of the two into a mid-time atmosphere. Happily, the Virginians have held to the love of the old things. It is worth something to know that the main street still is known as Duke of Gloucester street. It is a fine thoroughfare and on it stands a courthouse designed by Sir Christopher Wren, the architect of Saint Paul's cathedral in London, England, and many of that city's churches.

Bruton church, in which is the font used at the baptism of Pocahontas at Jamestown, also stands facing Duke of Gloucester street. It is an appealing structure. The building is clad with the ivy of England, which grows and thrives in this latitude. A churchyard, as quiet as that of the "Elegy," lies without its walls. It is supposed that the church was named by one of the early secretaries of the colony who was born in Bruton, England.

Some Bruton Church Tablets.

In the churchyard is a tomb with this inscription: "Under this marble lieth the body of Thomas Ludwell, Esq., Secretary of Virginia, who was born at Bruton, in the County of Somerset, in the Kingdom of England, and departed this life in the year 1678."

Close to the north door of the church are the graves of two children of Mrs. Martha Custis, who, when widowed, became the wife of George Washington. It is not the intention to make a necrology of this writing, but it is barely possible that two inscriptions, which appear on tablets inside the Bruton church, extolling the virtues of the dead, may have a living interest. Here is one of them:

"Near this marble lyes ye Honble. Daniel Paeke, of ye County of Essex, Esq., who was one of his masters Counsellors and sometime Secretary of the Colony of Virga. He dyed ye 6th of March, Anno 1670. His other felicities were crowned by his happy marriage with Rebecca, the daughter of George Evelyn, of the County of Surry, Esq. She died ye 2nd of January, Anno 1672, at Long Ditton, in ye county of Surry, and left behind her a most hopeful progeny."

The other tablet bears this: "MDCCLII. Inscribed to the memory of Doctor William Cocke, an English physician, born of reputable parents MDCXXI, at Sudbury in Suffolk, and educated at Queen's College, Cambridge. He was learned and polite, of undisputed skill in his profession and unbounded generosity in his practice, which multitudes yet alive can testify. He was many years of the Council, and Secretary of State for the Colony. In the reign of Queen Anne, and of King George, he died suddenly, sitting a judge upon the bench of the General Court, in the capitol, MDCCLXX. His Hon. friend Alex. Spotswood, Esq., then Governor, with the principal gentlemen of the country, attended his funeral, and weeping, saw the corpse interred at the west side of the altar in this church."

Wythe House and "Powder Horn." Almost within the shadow of Bruton church stands the Wythe house, for some time the headquarters of George Washington during the siege of Yorktown, which, with its historic memories, lies only a few miles away. The seeds of history were sown thick hereabouts.

Just back of the church and at a point easily reached from Duke of Gloucester street stands the old "Powder Horn," built by Governor Spotswood in 1714. This magazine, put up by the British governor, was used afterward by Washington to store powder which subsequently was rammed into cannon to hurl shot at Cornwallis behind the breakwaters of Yorktown. The Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities has restored the Powder Horn, and it is now a museum for relics of the past.

If a loyal Williamsburger lends his sight-seeing aid you will not be allowed to leave the "oldest incorporated city in America" until you have visited the College of William and Mary, the oldest college in America, having only Harvard.

Veteran Indian Fighter.

Soon there will be held in Washington a meeting of the Society of Indian Wars. From all over the country old-time army officers will come to Washington to live over the days that they spent in tramping and in fighting on the plains.

The oldest man present at the meeting will be Brig. Gen. Anson Mills. This American soldier, now on the retired list, is eighty-eight years old. He drives a motorcar almost daily on the streets of Washington, and he shows every evidence of having kept his youth.

Last year at the Indian society meeting Gen. Charles King of Milwaukee read a paper on the Sioux campaigns of 1875-76. He paid a tribute to the fighting qualities of General Mills. Since then the records have been turned to and one of two of the fighting experiences of this almost nonagenarian general have been plucked therefrom. Prior to giving them it might be said that General Mills was a farm boy, for he was born on a farm in Boone county, Indiana, in 1834.

It was just before Sitting Bull and his men had killed off Custer and his troopers in the Big Horn country that Capt. Anson Mills, in command of one squadron of the Third cavalry, met the Sioux in a fight on the Rosebud. Mills and his squadron were near the Rosebud river early one morning when a scout—a half-breed Indian—came into the camp, with his pony on a dead run, shouting: "The Sioux are just ahead."

How Mills Charged the Bluffs.

Mills' command was a part of the force of General Crook, who was operating against the Indians in that section of the country. Immediately after the coming of the scout Crook's adjutant dashed up to Mills with the order from his chief to "Charge the bluffs on the center."

Of what followed General Forsythe says this: "Captain Mills gave but two commands. 'Right into line!' and as his four splendid troops of cavalry promptly swung into battalion front, he raised himself in his stirrups and shouted: 'Charge!' Every trooper in ranks drove home his spurs, and the superb body of troops swept up the steep slope in a mad rush for the defiant Sioux, who, as the men came galloping on, opened on them with their rifles, sending down men here and there, but not in the least checking the weight of the charge; for, as they gained the crest in splendid alignment, and saw the Sioux drawn up to meet them 200 yards away, the whole command burst into a tremendous cheer, and, breaking into a dead run, made straight for them; but before they were within fifty yards of the Indians the Sioux broke wildly and fled down the opposite slopes in every direction. The battle of the Rosebud was on."

His Attack on American Horse.

Crook's men were nearly starving, and in September, toward the end of the summer's campaign, Captain Mills was ordered to Deadwood to get provisions—as another writer has put it, "any kind of provisions, for God's sake!"

Mills did not expect to meet Indians on that march to the Black Hills country, but he was prepared to meet them, as a good soldier always is prepared, and he was ready to take the offensive at a moment's notice. When he was near Slim Buttes he came upon an Indian village under the command of the great Sioux chief, American Horse. Mills did not wait for the order to attack, but attacked at once.

American Horse had a following great in number, but Mills surprised him and routed him, capturing the village and a large supply of much-needed provisions. American Horse took to the hills with his men and found a position that was impenetrable to such a small force as that at Mills' command. The captain gathered the provisions together, felt out the Indian chief's position and dispatched a courier to Crook for re-enforcements. In the meantime American Horse managed to get a courier to his fellow chief, Crazy Horse, who with his band rode rapidly toward Slim Buttes.

On that day Crazy Horse thought he would have only the small squadron of Mills to meet. Re-enforcements had come, however, and Mills led them into the fight and won it. Anson Mills has been called "The American soldier who was never known to wait."

Saving the Heat.

It is recognized generally that the losses of heat from bare pipes and boilers are considerable, but their real magnitude is little appreciated. The fact that the loss from 1,000 square feet of exposed surface at 100 pounds per square inch in steam pressure represents more than 300 tons of coal annually is a sufficient justification for the serious consideration of this subject. The value of a good nonheating-conducting cover should therefore not be overlooked.

One of these covers, composed of 35 per cent magnesian carbonate and 35 per cent asbestos introduced as a binder, has been found very efficient, according to a recently completed report by the Mellon Institute.

Dan Tucker.

The Dan Tucker in the negro song with the refrain "Out o' de way, ole Dan Tucker," is said to refer to Capt. Dan Tucker of Virginia, second governor of Bermuda.

Crazy As Ever.

Most of the people who formerly were trying to invent perpetual motion are now endeavoring to get something for nothing.

The salary paid to the President of Germany is the lowest paid in any head of state in the world.

Pheasant Stopped Train.

A pheasant stopped a Great Western railway express from London in an extraordinary way near Welshpool. The brakes were suddenly applied, and the engineer was at a loss to know what had happened. It was not until he dismounted from the footplate and passed to the front of the locomotive that he discovered a dead pheasant. Presumably, the bird, flying across the front of the engine, had struck the pipes operating the air brake, which came into action, and caused the train to stop.

Must Respect Authority. While we emphasize liberty, while we believe with all our hearts that liberty to us is a great and essential thing, we must also believe that authority is a mighty and necessary thing, and must be respected if we enjoy liberty.—Grit.

Midnight Walks for Health. A famous English physician, an authority on atmospheric pollution, has made the interesting discovery that the hour when the air is purest is midnight. Impurities in the atmosphere begin to increase about 6 o'clock in the morning.

UPHOLDS RESOLUTION

If the discussion on Resolution No. 3 does not monopolize too much of your valuable space I shall be glad to review last week's letter by Mr. C. E. Homan. The outcome of this discussion will depend, I think, entirely on the spirit in which we approach it. There are two developments that have certainly surprised me. First, that any person with an eye to business efficiency should oppose the suggestion of cooperative buying, when that principle is making such a successful appeal to the world over. The second is, that any one will publicly defend the giving and taking of bribes, between public officials and big corporation's salesmen, as has developed since my first article.

Mr. Homan has not said anything in his article but what I can endorse neither has he said anything against collective bargaining, though he doubtless meant to do so. He opposes the State destroying local self-government to build up a huge centralized political machine at Harrisburg. I certainly do agree with him on that statement and hope that he can also say as I can, that it has not been done by my ballot, for let us not forget that every governmental prostitute in state and nation that we today are so bitterly castigating, is there for the only reason that the people voted him in. So while you're kicking some one, kick yourself the hardest, if you have been "regular". I will though right here make my apology to Mr. Finnegan, since reading his address of Feb. 9 at Harrisburg, by correcting the difference between Shaffer's last year and Finnegan's last year, as about three and one half instead of eight times Shaffer's total. A disparity still too great, considering results, which of course cannot all be laid on Mr. Finnegan, but also and largely on the "machine" which diverted the funds from the schools to grease the "machine" kept in power by the voters in these same school districts. Neither has the County Superintendent measured up to the demands of the Rural School by his failure to encourage the essential teaching of agriculture in the rural schools and the proper qualifications of teachers for this most important work. Directors also have been utterly indifferent to the introduction in the country schools of the essential study that will teach farm boys and girls to think in terms of farm life.

Objectors fail to note that the State has made no move, not even suggested, to take from the local authorities the buying of road material, neither have I. The state has not even suggested the advantage of collective bargaining for road supplies for the townships. I take the credit for bringing this before the public but must give the credit for the suggestion to an excellent business man from whom I learned that the state was buying its culverts for about one half what the townships pay for same material, the size of the order and elimination of expensive salesmen and "tips", with direct buying, the solution. Take Notice! Not collective buying but collective bargaining for a price on all the culverts needed by both state and township. Mr. Homan objects to making higher taxes but gives no remedy to lower them, I object also and give a remedy. Mr. Biddle says it means more officials. I say that it takes no more than six hours (the maximum official day at Harrisburg) to fill out a blank and mail to each Supervisor's Board, the firm name and prices. If it takes a week, it will only furnish a little expense to a lot of over-rested and useless political parasites or barnacles on the Ship of State in the hands of looters. To men of ordinary business acumen this should appeal without further argument, especially with such tangible evidence. Even for all the townships of Bedford County to buy collectively will be a great advance over the present plan, if the real purpose is to really lower taxes, or if so fearful of state influence then let the coming State Supervisor's Convention get a price for all the townships' needs, for aside from something practical of this kind it will likely be little more than a junket to get rid of money that would be better spent on our mud holes.

Another objects that we do not know who is to do the bargaining, showing how easy to hinder and how difficult it is to construct in mass action. I simply answer that we never know who the people shall elect to do business for them, but a more discredited High Way Department than the present one we shall not likely get and yet, if rightly informed, it does buy for about one-half what the townships pay. This plan is simply a good business proposition. The second development I wish we might pass by but dare not as it really is most important of all the bribe. When I paid for my dinner on last day of Supervisor's Convention, I was quietly told that it was paid for, that Mr. Boyer pays for all the Supervisor's dinners. I replied that I was not a Supervisor but that if I were Mr. Boyer could not pay for it. I only refer to this one smallest violation for the present, for good reasons, but this shall suffice to show how one salesman has monopolized the road business of the country. Before a full house last Thursday Mr. W. F. Biddle defended the paying by this agent for these dinners, comparing the practice with the buying a dinner for his past or recently at some public function. And yet at a previous date I had considerable difficulty in getting him to admit that Mr. Boyer had paid for his dinner. Now every body, Supervisor included, well know the pursers in paying for these dinners, and that not only do they enter into the out of the taxes of the public, but make easy the driving out of competitors by methods that bleed the taxpayers but are strictly illegal, despite the fact that these men are sworn to obey the law and constitution. These same methods seem to be popular in selling school supplies, also. These are bribes and too often account for adherence to the costly and unbusinesslike methods we should scrap for efficient and economic methods. I would cite those who make excuse for this petty bribery, to the bribery cases in Adams county, Ohio, before the last great war had done its deadening work on the public conscience, making Christ's Sermon on the Mount, a mere "scrap of paper". In this county men by the thousands were fined and disfranchised, by Judge Blair, for selling their votes to politicians for from one dollar and up (possibly some sold themselves for 75c) and so common was the offense, that after they saw that Judge Blair meant business by convicting a large number, the citizens of all stations in life, flocked by thousands, gave themselves up and plead guilty and were disfranchised, for I do not recall how long. A low degraded county, you say. By no means, for I heard Judge Blair say the people of that county were above the average in intelligence and prosperity, having furnished more than the usual number of men, therein born, to public life, including U. S. President, U. S. Senators and on down. But vote selling, he said, had become an obsession, resulting from a deadened conscience, excused and justified by a show of religious performances. And now in business also has this iniquity wormed its way secretly at the expense of taxpayers and peril to the standards of righteousness in business that later shall exact a fearful penalty. I am hoping that no one will further justify these practices but that with honest purposes we proceed to clean up our local affairs and then with clean hands carry the cleaning process on to Harrisburg and Washington, not forgetful that we cannot clean house anywhere with dirty water. I have been frank in writing, not to build up personal animosities, but that we may work out in our social, political and business affairs the standards we profess in our religious life. Is that asking too much?

LINCOLN AND THE

REPUBLICANS

(From the Oklahoma Leader, Farm-Labor)

Abraham Lincoln was looked upon as a rube by the high society set in Washington when he was President of the United States. This is to his credit as it indicates that he was in sympathy with the common people. Lincoln warned the common people against the coming of the present plutocratic despotism.

Despotism you may say is a severe word. It is. But it is the word Lincoln used. He said: "In my present position I could scarcely be justified were I to omit raising a warning voice against the approaches of this returning despotism." He deplored "the effort to place capital on an equal footing with, it not above, labor in the structure of the government."

If Lincoln were alive to-day he would indignantly repudiate the use of his name by the Republican Party. That party has placed capital in control of the Government. It grinds labor under its feet and spits on it.

"I have taken eight bottles of Tanlac and have actually gained 40 pounds in weight and feel better before in twenty-five years," says O. H. Mahaffy, of Nashville, Tenn.
Ed D. Heckerman.

Next Week's Program

MONDAY, TUESDAY—MARCH 13th, 14th.

ONE SHOW ONLY THAT LASTS FROM 7:15 TO 10:30 as follows:

- 1st. Harold Lloyd in a Feature Comedy, a laugh from start to finish.
- 2nd. Very Latest Pathe News, see all the late happenings.
- 3rd. CONWAY TERLE in "SHADOWS OF THE SEA" in six reels. This is a Super Special SELECT PRODUCTION that we guarantee, its replete with thrills, excitement and adventure. It's the best Sea picture since "Below the Surface". It's brand new, this is the first time it has been shown in any Theatre outside Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.
- 4th. CONCERT. FRANCIS HODEL, America's most successful tenor singer, accompanied by other great musicians.

HERE'S WHAT THE CUMBERLAND PAPERS SAY: That Francis Hodel has won Cumberland Music Lovers and held them as even the famous John McCormick failed to do on his appearance here, was evidenced again last evening when the popular lyric tenor held an audience spellbound throughout a varied program of operatic, ballad and lyric selections. Mr. Hodel's voice has attained its height in mellowness and richness. At Baltimore he was tendered an unprecedented ovation by an audience which overflowed the spacious Lehman's Hall, more than 500 people were turned away, unable to secure seats, long before his opening number the large Hall was overtaxed, while standing room could not be obtained. The applause that greeted "THAT TUMBLE DOWN SHACK IN ATHLONE" was thunderous and he was called on to reply with five encores before the thrilled audience permitted him to proceed with his repertoire.

POE'S DUNGEON IS

DENTIST'S CHAIR FOR TIGER

Dental work on a tiger in the Cincinnati Zoo was simplified by adopting a scheme from the tales of Edgar Allen Poe. Superintendent Sol Stephan, says Popular Science, remembered the contracting walls of the iron dungeon in Poe's "Pitt and the Pendulum."

The animal was induced to enter a narrow cage, the rear of which was fitted with a wooden partition that could be drawn forward by ropes. Slowly the tiger was forced up against the bars of the cage and pinioned there. After that it was a simple matter to treat the tooth.
